Greening India since 2001

In today's rapid pace of global population growth and increasing urban and suburban density, there is often less room for green spaces. However, further integrating different types of green spaces, or green infrastructure, into the built environment is becoming a priority.

Growth is inevitable and should happen in sharing with nature. The prime agenda is conservation of natural resources with a holistic approach in promoting green landscaping and urban forestry.

Landscape design and sustainable practices which are GREEN are becoming an integral part of the urban development.

The urban spaces can be converted to green through various options like vertical gardens, roof gardens, indoor landscapes enhance the indoor air quality through , increase the beauty of exterior landscape through phytoremediation, xeriscaping etc.
